STATEMENT

This year’s MFA exhibition is the culmination of three years of work by graduates in Industrial Design, Metals, Photography and Painting/Sculpture/New Media. As an exhibition, it features the individual accomplishments of each artist and designer, while also revealing something about the place in which their collective work has developed. One can find, throughout the exhibition, an engagement with place and community and a cross-disciplinary investigation of the world that reflects the breadth of research present in the School of Art + Design and at the University of Illinois. The works of these artists, designers, and educators reveal that the boundaries between the world of the studio/lab and the world of action are porous; we are confronted with both reflections of existing and past realities as well as worlds that have yet to be realized. The times ahead, as always, require both utopian plans and critical interventions. These graduates are well prepared to do both.

ABOUT OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS
The Graduate Program of the School of Art & Design offers an opportunity to work closely with faculty who are active, recognized artists, designers and scholars. We foster a rigorous immersion within your chosen area of study, while also opening doors to cross-disciplinary investigation and experimentation. As part of the College of Fine and Applied Arts, our students work alongside dancers, musicians, architects, urban planners and theater professionals. Along with the resources of the School—including up-to-date digital and material production labs—our graduate students have access to the Krannert Center for Performing Arts, the Krannert Art Museum, the world’s largest public university library, renowned scholars in every imaginable field, and the many other benefits of an internationally recognized, public research university.

Our graduate degree programs are:
Art Education: EdM, MA, and PhD
Art History: MA and PhD
Graphic Design: MFA
Industrial Design: MFA
Metals: MFA
Painting/Sculpture/New Media: MFA
Photography: MFA
All MFA programs are 3-year.
ADMISSIONS
The application deadline is typically in early January. Applications are submitted electronically and include a request for writing samples (Art History, Art Education) or a portfolio submitted on SlideRoom (MFA degrees). Applications and application material submitted after the deadline will not be reviewed for admission. All application materials will be reviewed by the School of Art + Design Graduate Admissions Committee by mid-March. Applicants will be notified by email shortly after. International students must submit English Proficiency test results and proof of funding documentation. To apply or find more information, see: http://www.art.illinois.edu

FUNDING
Graduate students in good standing in the School of Art + Design typically receive support packages that include waivers of full tuition and most campus fees, a value of $28,000 (based on 2016 out-of-state tuition). Applicants seeking financial aid should check the appropriate boxes on the Graduate Application online. Primary funding sources include:

Graduate Fellowships: These are competitive awards granted to degree candidates who have demonstrated especially strong academic achievement and outstanding future potential. Fellowship stipends range from $10,000 to $25,000 for the academic year and include a full waiver of tuition and a partial waiver of campus fees. Fellowships are gifts that don’t require service. For more information see http://www.grad.illinois.edu/fellowships.

Teaching Assistantships: Students in good standing can be assigned a teaching assistantship. These appointments require teaching and assisting faculty with courses, and require a work commitment of 10 hours per week. Assistants receive a stipend of $8,020 (before taxes) for the academic year and include a full waiver of tuition and a partial waiver of campus fees.
If you have any questions regarding the graduate admissions process or would like to learn more, please contact: Ellen de Waard, Coordinator of Graduate Academic Affairs at the School of Art + Design, edewaard@illinois.edu

The experience of, and reflection upon, one’s inner world--how it interacts with different people--is a constant thread that flows through my work. How form, aesthetics, and function can affect people’s behavior and change their minds has always captivated me. My thesis work explores meaningful, place-based interactions and the ways that online community informs travelers’ understanding of themselves. As we assign memory to space, we redefine place; as we review experience, we discover ourselves. My design gives the traveler a new approach to feel place, and a unique way of recalling memory. It helps travelers collect “drops” and evoke the “ripple effects” in the inner world: Drops provide a platform for travelers to find interesting events posted by local residents and explore the place in a more immersive way. They function like module “bricks” that people can insert into their trip to build a unique experience. Ripples help to extend vivid memory; it breaks the time and space barrier to bridge disparate travelers. Travelers leave their wonderful moments along the trip for future travelers to discover like footprints that recall those earlier memories. Through my work, I endeavor to promote the joy of immersing oneself in different lifestyles, and the unexpected, touching moments lighted by memory.

What does the experience of waiting in digital age look like? My work is focused on reinventing the waiting experience, with an emphasis on customer satisfaction, social engagement among adventurous food serendippers, and the culture of loyal customers in casual and fine dining restaurants. Waiting is a common experience in the dining process, and an unpleasant one for lots of customers. Waiting also typically lacks customer service, yet is an important time for keeping, or increasing, customer satisfaction. The returns may be great for service providers who invest money, time, and attention into improving perceived quality of service during the waiting process.

“The most powerful social media isn’t Facebook, it’s food”. A waiting line is an important site for information sharing between informed and uninformed consumers. My work aims to create a method for social engagement that nudges customers to find other adventurous food serendippers with which to share a table and possibly reduce waiting time and improve those customers’ perceptions of their waiting experience. This can lead to improved evaluations of a restaurant, and therefore to increased numbers of new and repeat customers.

As an artist, I am curious about how we interact with, and place value on, the objects in our lives. Why do we impose human feelings on certain things? How do objects communicate with us through their materiality and decoration? My work pulls on the rich history of the decorative arts to decode the language of objects and challenge the myth of history in which they exist.

Desire is one of the elemental motivations in human nature. It has a unique ability to strengthen and maintain life. Its energy is deeply embedded anywhere and anytime, as we go about our everyday life. In the history of mankind, clothing has functioned not only as physical protection, but also as an effective device to empower or hide the desires of power, beauty, and wealth, thereby creating social and cultural phenomena. My practice contextualizes the primitive energy that is submerged beneath the layers of garments, viewed as an empty structure. When the body is removed, the absence becomes evidence of it, and the internal structures remain full of its authentic spirit and fantasy. Through the processes of deconstructing and reconstructing materials into symbolic forms, I uncover the hidden intimate and sensual powers of humanity. It is a process of investigating the moments when ordinary objects become surreal and uncanny in order to redeem the socially constructed expectations and perceptions.

My work explores New Media to create interactive light installations. Pulling from science fiction and spiritual inspiration, I build immersive environments to examine the interplay of light and dark. Utilizing video projection, computer programming, electronics, sound, fiber optics, and LEDs I create interactive installations that transport viewers and encourage them to experience light in a new and engaging way. These rather complex, yet minimal works, strive to capture the eloquent beauty of light phenomena. Drawing on the innate allure of light, my work seeks to communicate focus, guidance, security, hope, and inspiration. My work re-imagines the body as a manifestation of light. It creates a mirror into another realm where one can see themselves as something more than crude matter. I love to elicit those contemplative moments of wonder and awe in the mystical and magical, and hope my work leaves the viewer mesmerized.

In our current media saturated culture, it is common to encounter a diverse range of images from varying points in time, simultaneously on pages, screens, and other mediated spaces. The history of representation, from ancient to present, is compressed to produce a visual consciousness that is a combination of disparate ages and cultures. In my paintings, I respond to this simultaneity of images by combining a variety of representational forms, exploring how meaning is conveyed, not just by what is depicted, but also how it is depicted. Merging the history of painting, illustration, advertising, video games, and other forms of media, I portray collections of objects and images that are an investigation of how representational forms can express ideology. Images are generally constructed to elicit a desired response from a specific viewer, often supporting a particular value or belief. This work questions these subtle messages by contrasting a variety of image making practices, revealing through comparison how similar subjects, depicted differently, can conjure varied meanings. The compositions conflate an assemblage of imagery in mediated space, studying the influence of representation in the development of perspective and identity.

My recent work is a surreal reflection of my cultural and sociological experiences. My art practice is based on the invention of fantastical narratives illustrated through illusionistic images. I produce paintings, drawings, and objects that are informed by the history of painting, religious imagery, and contemporary, allegorical pop-surrealism. I am especially engrossed in languages of representation that depict politics, power, belief, and resistance. My work synthesizes, and seeks to disrupt, these systems through the presentation of research, experimentation, and artistic production. I continually attempt to critically analyze and navigate the discourses that surround, constitute, and entangle my work, practice, and subjecthood. I invite the viewer to engage with an aesthetic that celebrates the artifice of vision and conceptually explores the fictitious and manipulative capacity inherent in representation.

My work explores the role of images and objects within the development of identity, memory, and desire. The acts of looking and collecting are central to my practice. Each project begins with the search for redeemable sources at estate sales, thrift stores, and other secondhand markets. Through various methods of manipulation, the materials become newly charged with potential for the senses - the familiar, the bizarre, the boring, the erotic. The reclaimed materials, combined with my own personal additions, become sculptural assemblages intended to provide new narratives.

I make performative sculpture and installation in order to put people together in a space to face ourselves and each other, to grapple with the multiple points of connection and departure that make up the ever-shifting identity of a social world. I make this work to explore the quieter rooms of our cultural, collective, and individual memory. I make this work to expose unnoticed positions of power. The stories I tell in The Archive of Disagreeable Women are not untold. They are not explicitly silenced histories. They are stories that have quietly leaned far enough into the wallpaper as to become one with it. They have become invisible in their ubiquity. They are the soft, and seemingly innocuous, transgressions and traumas of the everyday. The narratives I construct are decidedly open-ended, meant to breathe life into--and thereby question the authority of--the archive. These artworks are living documents: they change with every installation, every exhibition space, every interaction. My hope is to bring these stories, and their inherent connectivity, out of the wallpaper and into the active space of our consciousness.

My work examines the complicated relationships between religious practices and cultural politics through an active investigation of both traditional spiritual practices and the manipulative tendencies of religious institutions. I employ a combination of anthropological research, personal narratives, and the socio-political influences of contemporary religions, resulting in artwork that reveals my varied conceptual and material approaches to this complicated subject matter. Recently, work has been focused on analyzing positions of power within these institutions, questioning the use of authority and the effects of said authority. While the content of my work is conceptually directed, experimentation with materials is often a starting point for many projects. These materials are selected and manipulated intuitively, relying on technical knowledge and in-depth research of materials that both form, and are formed by, my subject matter. This is further influenced by material traditions and art historical relationships. In this series, I attempt to convey the emotions that accompany my experiences, as a woman, of contemporary religious influences by documenting staged performances of material and bodily explorations. The photographs are both a record of the performance as well as an intentional self-portrait, designed to generate an emotional response along with reflective examination of the function of ritual and the possibility of agency within religious practices and spiritual experiences.
